ELARA CIRCLES · TOPIC COMMUNITIES · DESIGN PROTOTYPE, NOT IN THE APP

Read first. Ask once. Come back for the answer.

This PDF shows every key screen of the prototype, one complete screen per page, so nothing is cut off.

Section 1: 390 × 844 (13 screens). Section 2: 320 × 568 (13 screens). Section 3: 320 × 568 at larger text, 130 % (13 screens). Section 4: six full-length scrolls at 390 wide.

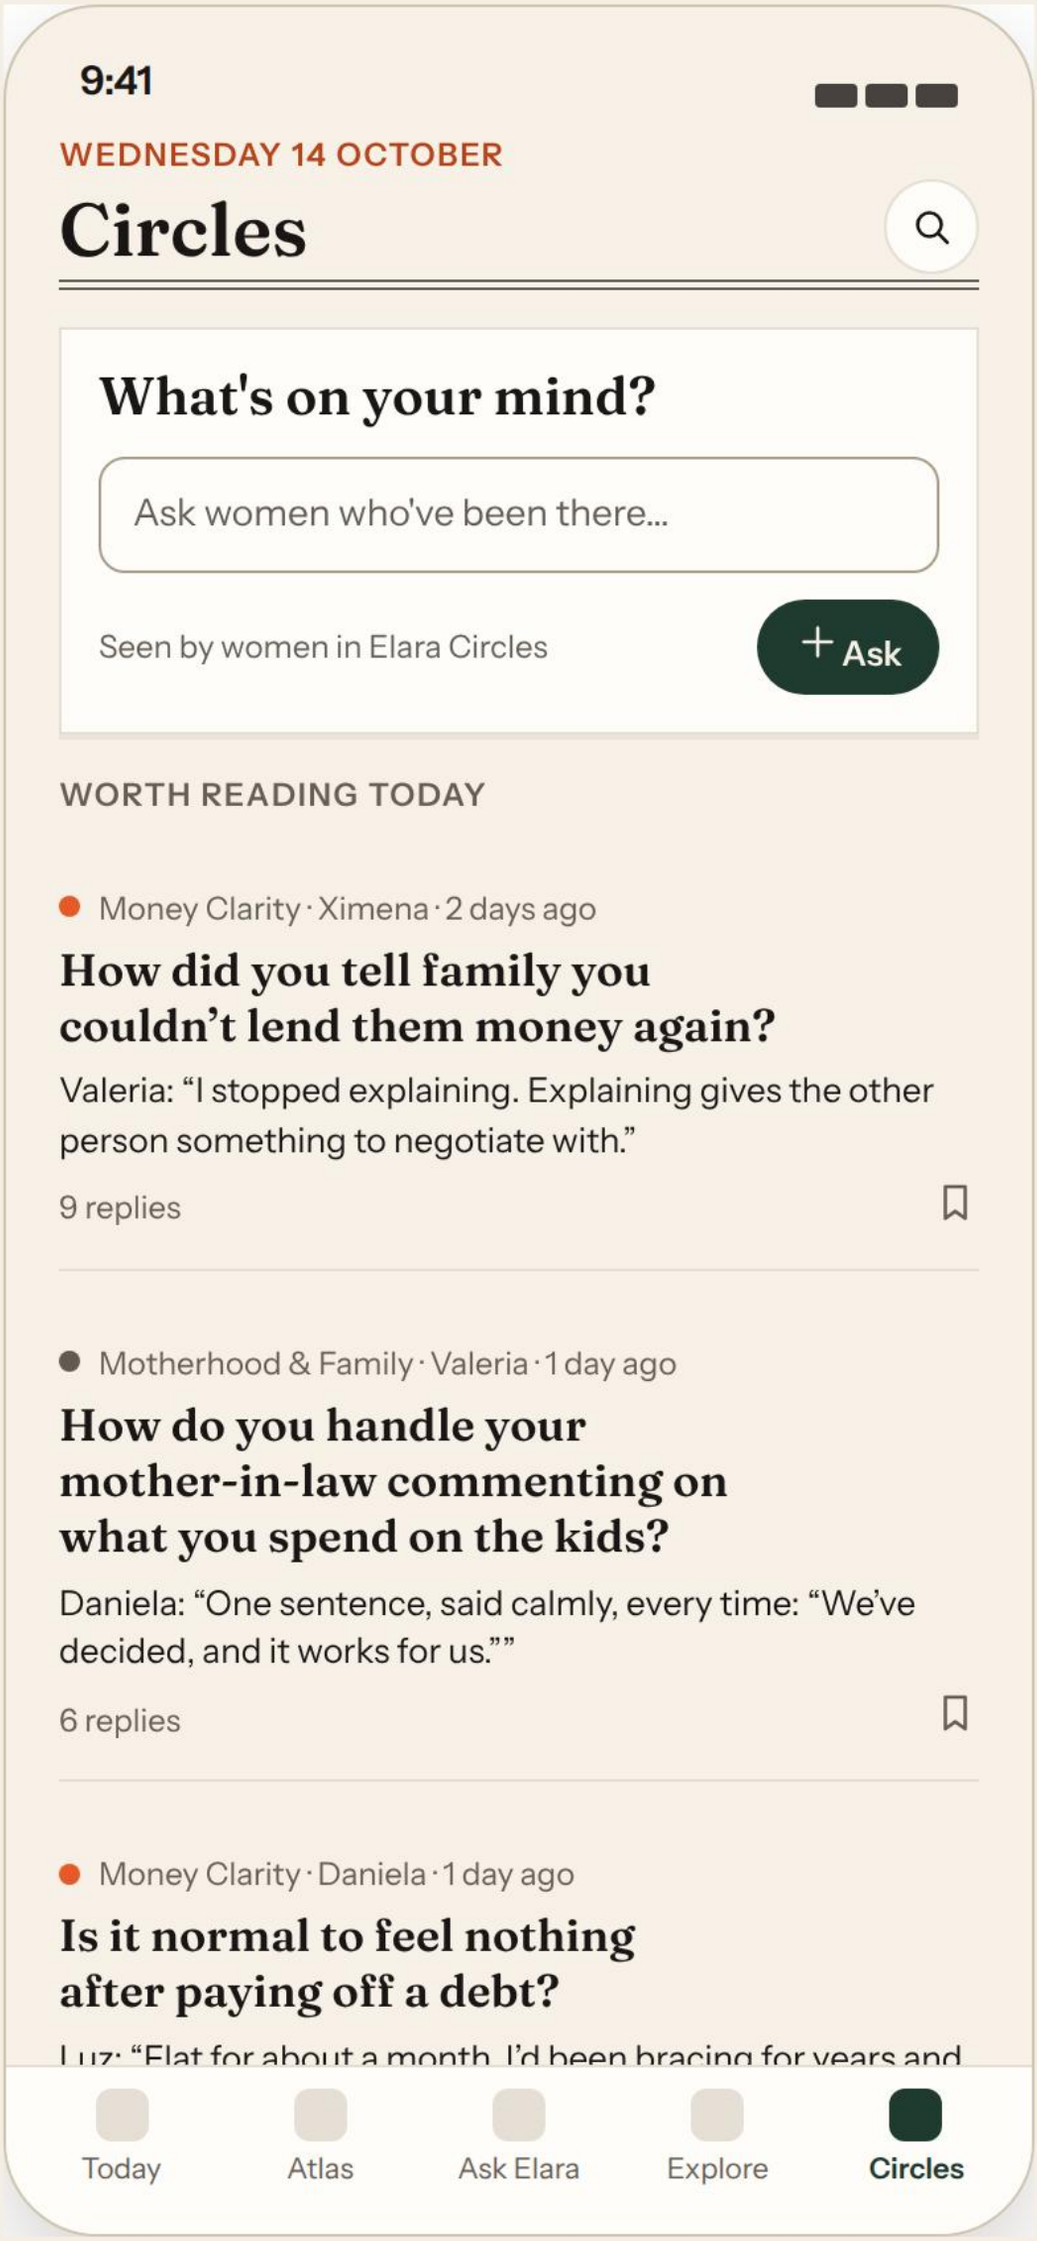

Interactive version: previews/circles-topic-communities/index.html (open in a browser).

This is the first version of the topic-community prototype. It does not yet include the later product decision (search results, browsing and requesting a private room, and Circle versus room navigation). That revision is waiting on esf.pdf and circle1.pdf, which could not be opened.

Names, questions and replies are fictional. Hosted-by, daily notification, 60-day rest and three-woman room minimum are proposals to test, not current app behaviour.

How did you tell family you couldn't lend them money again?

My brother asked again last week. It's the third time in two years. The first two times I lent it, it wasn't repaid, and I said nothing.

This time I said no, badly: I over-explained, apologised four times, and then lent half anyway because he cried. How have you actually said it, in words, without it turning into a fight? Especially when the no has to hold for next time.

I stopped explaining. Explaining gives the other person something to negotiate with. What worked: "I can't lend money. I can help you look at the options if you want." Then I said it again, the same sentence, when he pushed. The second time is the one that makes it stick.

Elara AI · only the women in this room see this

It has been quiet for three weeks. That happens, and nobody is behind. Here are three ways to go on.

Ask something lighter

Elara suggests: “What is one small thing that went right with money this week?” You can change it.

Invite one more woman from Money Clarity

Seven seats are open. Invitations are private and she can say no.

Let the room rest

Nobody is removed. Reminders stop and the shelf stays. If no one returns in 60 days, seats open to new women, and anyone can ask to come back.

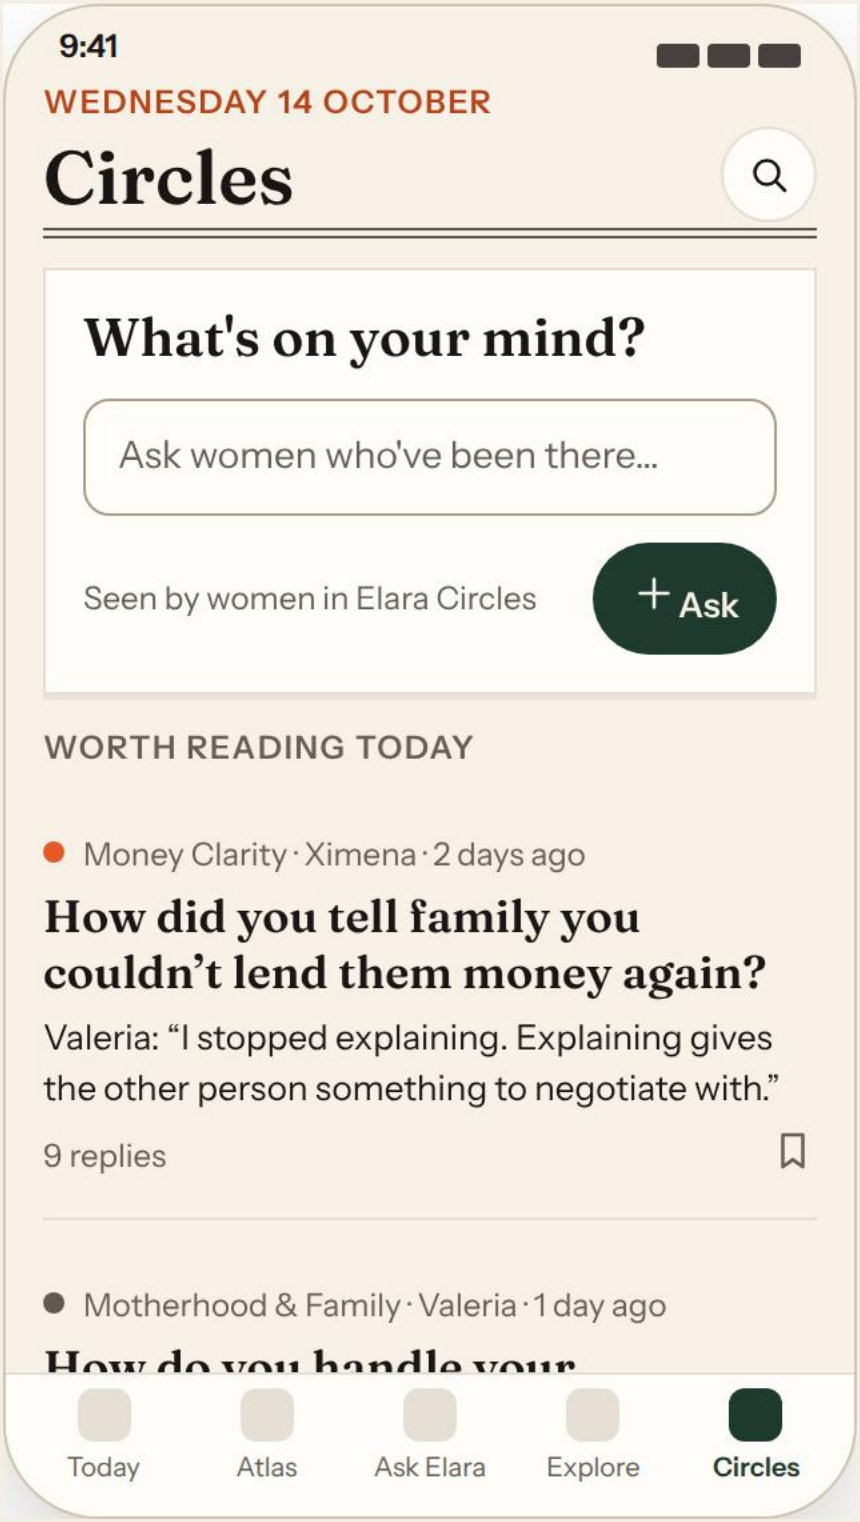

Let the room rest

Decide the number before the call, not during. Mine is zero for loans and a small amount I'll give and never expect back. A gift I can afford stopped the guilt, because I wasn't refusing him. I was choosing what I give.

I'm in the same spot with my sister, so no advice. But "lent half anyway because he cried" is the most honest line I've read here. I did that too.

Update, Sunday: I used Valeria's sentence almost word for word. He was quiet, then said okay. I cried in the car afterwards. Thank you both.

My mother keeps asking if I'm doing okay with money. How do I answer without lying or opening the whole thing?

She isn't prying, she's worried, and she'd offer money I don't want to owe. Last time I said "fine" and she saw straight through it.

I want one answer that's true and closes the subject kindly.

I give her one true sentence and one boundary: "It's tight this month and I'm handling it. I'll tell you if I need help." Then I change the subject to something she can do, like Sunday lunch. Worry needs a job.

Ask her what she's afraid of. Mine was afraid I'd end up where she did. When I said "I'm not where you were," she stopped asking.
